

Serving as Office Administrator of the National Black Nurses Association (NBNA), Tatum Williams oversees administrative policies and procedures, prepares financial and statistical reports, and oversees departmental communications. With her extensive experience in health policy and education, Williams brings to NBNA a comprehensive background in healthcare research, project planning, data analysis, and communication strategies.

Prior to joining NBNA, Williams worked as a Family Health Bureau Intern at the DC Department of Health Community Health Administration. There she designed and crafted epidemiology maps, executed research initiatives, and studied current health trends. Williams has held many leadership positions including being a standing member of Howard University's Health Management Society, National Society of Leadership and Success, and Black Girls House Chapter. As an advocate for Black health and wellness, Williams embodies that in her daily work.

Williams received her Bachelor's of Science in Health Management from Howard University and maintained a place on the Allied Health Honor Society and Dean's list throughout her college career.
